Herpes Infection from Makeup Products

The herpes virus can spread from person to person when in contact with infected skin directly such as by kissing and with saliva or oral secretions from an infected person left on towels, utensils and, yes, lipstick!!

Herpes infection appears as blisters on the lips and the mouth area which can stay up to ten days. Lipstick and makeup brushes touching these parts can spread the virus to other people. Mascara wands or eyeliner, whether tried out as tester on makeup stands or shared between friends may lead to irritation and conjunctivitis, caused by both bacteria and viruses including herpes. There is no cure for herpes infection. The treatments will only shorten the length of infection.

In recommendation for cosmetic safety, the US FDA warns against sharing makeup, "Don't share makeup or swap eye cosmetics".
